Man gets over 20 years for killing wife

Madison King, 23, was stabbed to death by her husband in June 2021.

A judge described Madison King, 23, as a “bright light” at the sentencing hearing for her killer Monday.

EVERETT — The sentencing for the killer of Madison King was so packed Monday afternoon that family and friends had to stand in the back of the courtroom gallery.

Loved ones wept and held each other. Four of them addressed the judge, asking for the most stern sentence possible.

“Homero Osuna-Gonzalez stabbed my sister more than 50 times,” said Mikayla King, one of King’s sisters, reading from a letter.

“Yet at maximum he will serve less than half of that (many years) in prison.”

Under state guidelines, Osuna-Gonzalez faced a range of 12¼ to 20½ years behind bars for second-degree murder.

Snohomish County Superior Court Judge Janice Ellis ordered the defendant to serve a sentence at the high end of that range.

“Madison King is a bright light,” Ellis said. “She is a person whose spirit has a warm glow. She comforted many. She lighted the way for others, and she drew others to her. I did not know her, but I know these things about her because of the words that have been spoken in the courtroom hear today.”

Osuna-Gonzalez, 26, was

ALL EARS Mukilteo couple provides surgery for children born without ears

Dr. Prabhat and Trish Bhamma are part of a nonprofit volunteer team providing treatment for microtia in Guatemala.

ANDREA BROWN
WHAT’S UP WITH THAT?

MUKILTEO — Ears are a big deal, especially if you aren’t born with them. What’s up with that? Dr. Prabhat Bhamma, a surgeon, and his wife, Trish, a nurse practitioner, are in Guatemala this week on a HUGS Foundation mission for children with microtia, a congenital deformity of small or missing ears.

“Just made our first ear!” he wrote in an email to The Daily Herald on Monday.

The new ear is constructed from pieces of the child’s rib cartilage.

There are 33 microtia surgeries planned for the week. Each surgery takes about five hours with two or three specially trained surgeons at the helm.

“It’s one of the most complicated surgeries in plastic surgery,” Prabhat Bhamma, a facial plastic and reconstructive surgeon at Providence Medical Group, told the Herald before the trip.

In the United States, the complex procedure can cost $40,000 or more and is covered by most major insurance carriers for children with microtia.

In impoverished Guatemalan villages, few if any children would get the microtia surgery if not for teams such as Help Us Give Smiles or HUGS, which also does cleft lip and palate surgeries. Other missions by the New York-based nonprofit are in Ecuador and Vietnam.

Another HUGS team will do 61 cleft surgeries this week at the Guatemalan hospital. HUGS volunteers bring the needed medical supplies and travel at their own expense to Obras Sociales del Santo Hermano Pedro in Antigua, about 25 miles from Guatemala City.

The care is provided at no cost to patients and their families.

“They are very happy and always very thankful,” Trish Bhamma said.

“They will literally walk for miles and wait for days,” Prabhat Bhamma said.

Think of that next time you get testy waiting 30 minutes on a medical visit. The microtia surgery goes like this: A template is created of the child’s “normal” ear using X-ray paper (in most cases, the other ear develops normally). Then, with the child under general anesthetic, the surgeon removes rib cartilage, which is living tissue, and carves a new ear structure using the template as a guide. The new ear is positioned under the scalp to live and grow with the child. The following year, a second operation lifts the ear above the skin like a typical ear.

Dr. Prabhat Bhamma performs surgery on a child with microtia in a Guatemalan hospital in 2016 with a team of New York-based HUGS foundation medical volunteers.

“The outcomes are amazing,” Prabhat Bhamma said.

People without microtia take their ears for granted. Ears do more than hold up eyeglasses and gleam with jewelry.

“Microtia patients often suffer from significant mood disorders and social difficulties,” he said. “They are often bullied and ostracized by their peers, and will even wear hats to disguise the missing ear. Reconstruction will often give them back their confidence and self-esteem.”

Being a father of two children, daughters Neviya, 7, and Maya, 9, he can only imagine what these parents must feel.

“It solidifies my passion to do it,” he said. “I get the whole picture. This family is suffering.”

The prevalence of microtia varies geographically from about 1 to 17 per 10,000 births, he said, and is more common in Hispanic, Asian, Native American and Andean populations. It can range from a lump of tissue to a partially formed ear. Hearing loss often results.

Faith group’s videos highlight Everett homelessness efforts

Six videos show the work that Everett Faith in Action members do in partnership with the city to alleviate homelessness.

By BEN WATANABE
Herald Writer

EVERETT — A group that partners with the city of Everett to help homeless people is taking its message to the masses.

Everett Faith in Action, a collection of faith-based organizations, last week published six videos about some of the efforts to address homelessness in the city.

A screening and conversation about the issue is set for 5:30 p.m. Sunday at First Baptist Church, 1616 Pacific Ave., Everett.

“Homelessness harms our entire community, not just the individual,” said Carol Jensen, an Everett Faith in Action member and retired Lutheran pastor. “... The videos tell a story of why people of faith care about this, why we need to have compassion, that these people are our neighbors.”

The group got $12,000 in a contract with the city to produce the video series that explains the current state of homelessness in Everett.

Ben Breeden, Everett’s homeless response coordinator, was a pastor and on the group’s steering committee before being hired for the new city job in January. He said the videos are useful to “improve the discussion” about homelessness.

insurmountable problem,” Breeden said. “I think it’s really important to see there are great things happening.”

The series shows the problem, some of the work to address it and invites people, especially those in faith communities, to join as donors and volunteers. They

KISS guitarist and front-man Paul Stanley had microtia.

"When you have something physical that sets you apart from people it makes you really a target of unrelenting scrutiny and sometimes ridicule. And, quite honestly, the idea of becoming famous was a way to push it in people's faces and go, 'You see, you should have been nicer to me,'" Stanley told Dan Rafter in an interview.

Prabhat Bhamra got involved with HUGS in 2014 as part of his fellowship at Harvard Medical School. This is his sixth HUGS mission. Trish Bhamra, who has worked in pediatrics and trauma care, joined him in recent years.

"We start at the hospital at 6 or so in the morning and stay until 6 or 7 at night," she said. Or later. "It all depends on how fast they are at making ears."

She helps run the post-anesthesia care unit, the PACU, at the Guatemala hospital.

"You walk in and you feel this whiff of bleach. That's what they use to clean everything," she said.

Most on staff don't speak English, so the medical workers communicate
